

Song of the Powers

Mine, said the stone
mine is the hour.
I crush the scissors,
such is my power.
Stronger than wishes, my power, alone.

Mine, said the paper,
mine are the words
that smother the stone
with imagined birds,
reams of them, flown
from the mind of the shaper.

Mine, said the scissors,
Mine all the knives
Gashing through paper's ethereal lives;
Nothing's so proper as tattering wishes.

As stone crushes scissors,
As papers snuffs stone
And scissors cut paper,
All end alone.

So heap up your paper
And scissor your wishes
And uproot the stone
From the top of the hill.
Then all end up alone
As you will, you will.

David Mason